

Charon is the son of Erebus and Nyx. He is responsible for ferrying the dead from the world of the living to the world of the dead, the underworld. Across the river of the Styx. Charon appears in many myths as an angel of death.

One day, Eurydice was walking in the meadow when she was struck by a poisonous Viper. She was killed, but her husband Orpheus was on a mission to bring her back to the real world. He was a great musician and he planned to sing his way through the underworld. Orpheus first saw Charon, and played a great song and impressed Charon, so Charon ferrying him across the River of Styx into the Underworld. He then played a tune for the three-headed dog, Cerberus. When he finally reached his wife Eurydice, Hades told him he could bring her back to the Earth if he walked out and never looked back to see if she was still following him. The whole time he was walking out, he kept thinking she was not there. Finally, when he reached the surface he turned around and she was there, but she was not yet out of the tunnel, and she was sucked back in and would never be able to come back out.
